Occupational Health Review

Product summary

Background

This information will allow employers to fully understand the fundamental occupational health risks faced by its employees. This will ensure that they can identify gaps in their current strategy and the necessary preventative measures necessary to close them.

Overview

A review of those activities undertaken which may have occupational health implications for employees.

This review looks at occupational health as a whole as opposed to other courses that just deal with safety issues. It highlights areas that employers may not have otherwise picked up on.

Objectives

The purpose of the review is to investigate an insured organisation for liabilities in respect of illness, injuries and diseases caused or exacerbated by the working environment or practices. In particular:

- Assess potential health risks faced by all workers, and to differentiate between acceptable and unacceptable exposures
- Consider the suitability of measures taken (if any) to control exposures
- Assess documentary evidence relating to risk assessments, training etc. with a view to the ability of the insured in defending subsequent claims.

Features

- A review of policies, procedures and documentation in relation to occupational health issues
- A brief tour of the organisation's activities to ensure that documentation supports what they are doing
- Overview and feedback on findings at the end of the session
- A report containing findings and recommendations.

Benefits

- An independent and unbiased assessment of health risks
- The collation of the necessary information for the development of a management action plan
- Helps demonstrate legal compliance.

Where this would be useful

Will be of use for most organisations looking to benchmark/understand their current occupational health risk exposures.
